

Olympic Bingo!

B	I	N	G	O
Commentator discusses age of athlete over 30 as if they were the oldest person earth.	The unambiguous favorite wins gold!	You watch a sport you did not know was a thing until today.	Athlete is called the GOAT (greatest of all time).	Athlete is decorated (colorful manicure, blingy jewelry, sleeve of tattoos, glitter, etc.).
An athlete under 18 wins a medal.	The unambiguous favorite chokes/flames out and does not medal.	A commentator mangles the pronunciation of a country and/or athlete's name.	Athlete is referred to as "The Michael Phelps of [sport]."	More than a quarter of an athlete's body is wrapped in KT Tape.
An athlete who attends and/or trains at an American university competes for another country.	After a softly lit "up close and personal" segment gets you invested in an athlete/team, they win a medal!		Athlete is referred to as "The Simone Biles of [sport]."	A subset of the US swim and/or gymnastics team makes a goofy video for social media that NBC airs several times.
A commentator explains something obvious more than once during an event. (i.e., "Ten points is good, zero points is bad.")	After a softly lit "up close and personal" segment gets you invested in an athlete/team, they finish out of the medals.	A commentator giggles when saying "Djibouti."	Athlete breaks a world record.	At least one commentator for an event is an athlete who last competed in the 1980s.
A commentator loses his goshdarn mind and screams incoherently when something exciting happens.	The commentators get really excited about an athlete who is not an American.	You see a commercial starring Simone Biles.	We get a remote view of an athlete's family watching athlete compete.	A gold medalist bites their medal.

Read the Elite Athletes series today! Available at your favorite bookstore!

www.katemcmurray.com