

WINTER OLYMPICS BINGO!

B	I	N	G	O
An athlete talks to home via zoom, and they are extra and or the athlete cries.	The hockey commentators mention the Miracle on Ice/1980 gold medal game.	An NHL player scores a goal for a non-American/non-Canadian hockey team.	A non-European wins an alpine skiing medal.	A figure skater does something that has never been done in competition before.
A snowboarder or freestyle skier lands a trick no one has landed at the Olympics or ever.	The speed skating commentators mention Dan Jansen. (Kids, ask your parents.)	You see any curling coverage.	A non-Dutch speed skater wins a medal.	A figure skater uses music from Moulin Rouge .
Somebody complains about the commentary being recorded in Connecticut, not Beijing.	The Jamaican bobsled team wins a medal and/or a commentator makes a Cool Runnings reference.	Free Space! 	There's a soft-focus mini-documentary about some moment in Winter Olympics history.	Johnny Weir wears something with sequins, rhinestones, and/or feathers.
A former Olympian does the color commentary. (Exception: Figure skating.)	An openly LGBTQ+ Olympian wins a medal.	A summer Olympian is now competing in a winter sport (it's probably bobsled).	Any athlete breaks a track or trail (or world) record.	A figure skater who is not Russian wins a medal.
We see footage of a commentator winning a medal. (Drink if it's Tara Lipinski.)	You watch a sport in which no Americans qualified. (Women's ski jump, etc.)	You see a sport you didn't know was a thing.	You see a hokey segment about Chinese culture. (Drink if it's hosted by Mary Carillo.)	Someone mentions that Mariah Bell is extremely old for a figure skater (she's 25).
